Increased international investment in agriculture can support sustainable development and help meet food security needs at domestic, regional, and global levels. Yet, if not structured equitably or regulated carefully, investments may fail to provide expected benefits or may lead to social and environmental degradation. Despite these risks, investments in land for agriculture have remained attractive to foreign investors and host countries alike.

Countries concerned about sustainable development confront multiple challenges in managing international investment in agriculture. These challenges include developing robust legal and fiscal frameworks, negotiating equitable deals with investors, mitigating climate and environmental impacts, and protecting human rights. This virtual program, hosted by the Columbia Center on Sustainable Investment, equips participants with the necessary knowledge and skills to address some of the key challenges posed by international investments in agriculture. Participants learn from each other as well as top subject matter experts from Columbia University and beyond.

This program presents an interdisciplinary approach to sustainable international investments in agriculture. Participants work with practitioners and experts, gaining substantive knowledge, analytical tools, and relevant skills.

The 2025 training will be held virtually.

Who should attend

The program is designed for mid-level public sector officials and civil society representatives from low and middle-income countries, whose responsibilities relate to investments, agriculture, land, or rural development. Representatives of bilateral donor agencies, foundations, intergovernmental organizations, UN agencies, and the private sector may also be admitted.

Vivion Scully, CEO,
Agro-Investment Corporation of Jamaica:

"Collaborating with participants from different continents was an enriching experience. We had the chance to exchange ideas, share success stories, and learn from the unique perspectives of our peers..."

Jeremy Agyemang,
Head of Agribusiness Unit,
Ministry of Food and Agriculture, Ghana:

"The training at CCSI was phenomenal . . . Those delivering the training were experts in their field."

Yuliya Neyman, Land Governance and Legal Advisor, U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID):

"I found the CCSI Executive Training on Sustainable Investment to be practical, engaging and diverse . . . perhaps the most interesting part of the training was the diversity and experience of the participants, who hailed from five continents and spanned the range from private sector to government agencies and academia."
