

Columbia Center
on Sustainable Investment

A JOINT CENTER OF COLUMBIA LAW SCHOOL
AND THE EARTH INSTITUTE, COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

Columbia FDI Perspectives

Perspectives on topical foreign direct investment issues

Editor-in-Chief: Karl P. Sauvant (Karl.Sauvant@law.columbia.edu)

Managing Editor: Luca Jobbagy (lj2406@columbia.edu)

The Columbia FDI Perspectives are a forum for public debate. The views expressed by the authors do not reflect the opinions of CCSI or our partners and supporters.

No. 330 May 2, 2022

WTO processes would benefit from the input of civil society

by

Karl P. Sauvant and Rebecca Chacon Naranjo*

WTO negotiations involve complex issues. Negotiators are typically government officials who—while adept in international negotiations—may lack the detailed expertise and practical experience related to specific issues that are the subject of negotiations. Negotiators could therefore benefit from the information that civil society—including the private sector, trade unions, NGOs, academia—can provide. Civil-society representatives can contribute practical expertise and experience and increase the acceptability of outcomes. Their participation also adds transparency.

The WTO’s 1994 Marrakesh founding document recognized the value of civil society in Article V.2: “The General Council may make appropriate arrangements for consultation and cooperation with non-governmental organizations concerned with matters related to those of the WTO.”

Yet, not much has changed since 1994.¹ Civil-society involvement today primarily consists of briefings, national and regional outreach and informal trade dialogues with the WTO Secretariat.² Members engage ad hoc at the national level. The only broad-based outreach event is the Public Forum organized by the Secretariat,³ an annual series of panels involving WTO members, NGOs, academics, and private sector and labor organizations.⁴

The WTO negotiations of an Investment Facilitation for Development \(IFD\) Agreement offer an opportunity to at least institutionalize civil-society input into the implementation and operation of this prospective Agreement, an Agreement that focuses on specific technical measures. To this end, the negotiators can draw on the OECD’s fruitful experience with its Business and Industry Advisory Committee (BIAC), the Trade Union Advisory Committee (TUAC) and OECD Watch:

- BIAAC and TUAC represent key stakeholders from OECD members that “bring in the views of civil society”, working as “formal consultative bodies”.⁵ BIAAC and TUAC are umbrella associations.⁶ They have official consultative status as OECD independent institutional partners and, specifically, are “designated as ‘advisory bodies’ to the OECD’s Investment Committee”.⁷ BIAAC liaises with the business community through its policy groups, while TUAC does so with trade unions through its Administrative Committee, to arrive at consensus positions that are presented in the OECD. Both engage in regular consultations with the Organisation on various policy matters, including the Investment Committee that oversees investment policy issues, including the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises. They also ensure that the Guidelines and National Contact Points are known to, and understood by, members.
- OECD Watch represents over 130 NGOs and other civil society organizations from 55 countries at the OECD. It is not an institutionalized committee like BIAAC and TUAC; its current scope is primarily limited to advising the OECD’s Investment Committee, including regarding the Guidelines and National Contact Points.

Reflecting on its experience, the OECD observes: “[W]e believe that engaging with civil society helps improve our policy recommendations and our impact on society”.⁸

Given this experience, the negotiators of the WTO IFD Agreement should provide for a mechanism that gives consultative status to civil society in relation to the Committee on Investment Facilitation that the Agreement seeks to establish. The mechanism should create a clear process for input by civil society into the deliberations of that Committee. The purpose should be to contribute, in an on-going dialogue, ground-level, practical expertise and experience for the implementation and operation of this Agreement. Such a mechanism and process—complementing ad-hoc contacts—could be patterned on the OECD’s successful model involving BIAAC, TUAC and OECD Watch.

Almost 30 years ago, the WTO’s Marrakesh Agreement provided the mandate to consult and cooperate with civil society. It is high time to take action. The WTO’s Director-General should encourage members to do so and facilitate forging a consensus among WTO members. The negotiators of the IFD Agreement can pioneer this effort. They should aim for an effective Agreement and set a precedent for the modernization of the WTO. They should not miss this opportunity.

* Karl P. Sauviant (karlsauvant@gmail.com) is Resident Senior Fellow, Columbia Center on Sustainable Investment, a joint center of Columbia Law School and the Earth Institute, Columbia University; Rebecca Chacon Naranjo (rc3377@columbia.edu) is a Sciences Po Paris graduate and an LLM candidate for 2022 at Columbia Law School. The authors wish to thank Marian Ingrams, Bernard Kuiten, Petros Mavroidis, Stephen Pursey, and Manfred Schekulin for their comments on earlier drafts, and Karl Brauner, Bernard Hoekman and Harsha V. Singh for their helpful peer reviews.

¹ Even though the General Council agreed on “Guidelines” in 1996.

² Initiated by Roberto Azevêdo and organized upon request by civil society.

³ Erin Hannah et al., “Reforming WTO-civil society engagement,” World Trade Review, vol. 16 (2017), pp. 427–448.

⁴ However, Supachai Panitchpakdi established informal advisory bodies with business organizations and NGOs in 2003; this initiative was discontinued—Carlos Braga and Athanasios Kondis, “The WTO and the business community”, p. 13.

⁵ OECD, “How we work : How we engage with civil society”.

⁶ Both have Secretariats. BIAAC (<https://biac.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/03/Business-at-OECD-Corporate-Brochure-1.pdf>) has a General Assembly. It organizes its consultations in 38 policy groups, collaborating frequently with the ICC and IOE. TUAC (<https://tuac.org/wp-content/uploads/2018/04/ABOUT-TUAC-1.pdf>) has Plenary Sessions, supported by an Administrative Committee, representing national members and partner international trade unions. Both organizations participate in the annual OECD Ministerial Council meetings.

⁷ OECD Watch, “Advisory Groups”, April 8, 2019.

⁸ OECD, op. cit. The OECD is just one example of how the input of civil society is being sought. Regionally, e.g., APEC has a private-sector arm, the APEC Business Advisory Council, to advise governments and APEC officials on business-sector priorities and concerns. The EU has “Domestic Advisory Groups” as a mechanism for civil society to be engaged with, and monitor, the implementation of EU trade agreements. Consultative mechanisms exist also at the national level; the Office of the United States Trade Representative \(USTR\), e.g., has 26 thematic consultative committees that engage with civil society on a broad basis; <https://ustr.gov/about-us/advisory-committees>.

The material in this Perspective may be reprinted if accompanied by the following acknowledgment: “Karl P. Sauvant and Rebecca Chacon Naranjo, ‘WTO processes would benefit from the input of civil society,’ ” Columbia FDI Perspectives No. 330, May 2, 2022. Reprinted with permission from the Columbia Center on Sustainable Investment (<http://ccsi.columbia.edu>).” A copy should kindly be sent to the Columbia Center on Sustainable Investment at ccsi@law.columbia.edu.

For further information, including information regarding submission to the Perspectives, please contact: Columbia Center on Sustainable Investment, Riccardo Loschi, riccardo.loschi@columbia.edu; Luca Jobbagy, lj2406@columbia.edu.

The Columbia Center on Sustainable Investment (CCSI), a joint center of Columbia Law School and the Earth Institute at Columbia University, is a leading applied research center and forum dedicated to the study, practice and discussion of sustainable international investment. Our mission is to develop and disseminate practical approaches and solutions, as well as to analyze topical policy-oriented issues, in order to maximize the impact of international investment for sustainable development. The Center undertakes its mission through interdisciplinary research, advisory projects, multi-stakeholder dialogue, educational programs, and the development of resources and tools. For more information, visit us at <http://ccsi.columbia.edu>.

Most recent Columbia FDI Perspectives

- No. 329, Stephen Pursey, “They can run but they can’t hide: MNEs and responsible business conduct,” Columbia FDI Perspectives, April 1, 2022
- No. 328, Roger Strange, “The future of global value chains: Key issues,” Columbia FDI Perspectives, April 4, 2022
- No. 327, Ucheora Onwuamaegbu, “A managed dispute-resolution insurance scheme for countries in investor-state arbitration: Ensuring early legal representation of respondents,” Columbia FDI Perspectives, March 21, 2022
- No. 326, Meg Kinnear, “The launch of a new generation of the ICSID Rules,” Columbia FDI Perspectives, March 7, 2022
- No. 325, James Otto, “How FDI in the mining sector can assist communities to achieve sustainable development,” Columbia FDI Perspectives, February 21, 2022

All previous FDI Perspectives are available at <https://ccsi.columbia.edu/content/columbia-fdi-perspectives>.